As they sit together in the sun, Jake falls asleep, and a gust of wind sends the blanket sailing. First it brushed against the apple tree, where a mother bird was feeding her babies, and it soon warms a shivering calf, tickles turnip-munching bunnies, and is used by a puppy and its mother for tug-of-war.

The Flyaway Blanket: Allan Peterkin, Emmeline Pidgen ...

What happens when a favorite blanket flies away on the breeze? While a mother and son are out hanging laundry, the child's favorite blanket is picked up by the wind and flies away. Beautiful illustrations show the blanket on its journey through the neighborhood as it visits many different animal mothers and babies, eventually returning to its original owner to be cherished and loved.

Despite an initial reluctance, Jake helps Momma hang up his favorite blanket. As they snooze in the sun, the wind pulls it off the line and past a family of birds. The breeze takes it to a cow and her calf, later past some bunnies, and lastly makes a stop with a dog and her puppy. The blanket ends its trip by being blown back home to Jake and Momma.

The Flyaway Blanket. Author: Allan Peterkin Illustrator: Emmeline Pidgen. Publisher: Magination Press. It's a windy day so Jake and Momma are hanging out the laundry. Jake is reluctant to leave his favourite blanket on the washing line, so they sit down on the grass to wait for it to dry. As mother and son doze in the sunshine, a gust of wind carries the blanket up into the sky.

This blanket is named Fly Away both for the motif which is taken from 'flying geese' blocks in quilting, and for the bittersweet fact that babies grow up and fly away one day. Aesthetically it was inspired by some of the fabulous modern quilts I have been seeing on Instagram lately.

A child's blanket sails off on a wind-driven odyssey, then circles back to perform its proper function. Think "cozy." Also "agenda." Just as young Jake and his mother settle down for a nap in the yard, a gust of wind snatches his treasured blue blanket off the clothesline and sends it flying past families of birds, bunnies and other animals.
